This guide answers the most common questions about your personalized 1:1 program — how to follow it, what to expect, and how we work together to adjust it over time.

SECTION ONE

Using My Personalized Plan

How do I know which routine to do each day?

Follow the daily schedule provided in your personalized plan. Your routine has been chosen based on your individual assessment, goals, current patterns, and the areas we want to work on.

Each day may combine exercises, release work, posture, breathing, or facial work. You don't need to decide what to do each day yourself — simply follow the schedule prescribed for you.

Do I need to complete everything prescribed to me?

Yes, as much as possible. Your exercises and their dosage were chosen intentionally, so try to complete the full session rather than only the parts you enjoy or find easiest.

If you can't finish a session, don't compensate by doubling the next one — continue with your schedule and let us know if completing the routine is consistently difficult.

Can I change the order of my exercises?

Preferably, follow the order given in your plan. The sequence is often intentional — certain exercises or releases prepare your body for the work that follows.

If you need to change the order for time, discomfort, or another practical reason, check with us first rather than creating your own sequence.

What if I don't have time to complete the full routine?

Don't skip your practice entirely just because you can't complete the full session. If you're short on time, let us know and we'll guide you on how to approach it.

Don't randomly remove exercises or increase intensity to compensate later. Consistency and appropriate dosage matter more than trying to "make up" missed work.

How often will my plan be updated?

Monthly. Updates depend on your progress, response to the exercises, changes in your goals, and what we observe during your reviews or check-ins.

Some exercises may stay for longer because they're still serving a purpose; others may be progressed, reduced, replaced, or removed when appropriate.

Why have I been given some exercises more frequently than others?

Different exercises have different purposes — some build awareness or coordination, while others focus on mobility, release, strength, stability, breathing, or reducing tension.

Frequency and dosage are therefore individualized rather than equal across all exercises. Doing an exercise more often isn't automatically better.

Why am I doing posture, breathing, or body work instead of only facial exercises?

Because your face doesn't function independently from the rest of your body. Your posture, breathing, neck and jaw function, muscular coordination, and overall movement all influence how your face works and how tension is distributed.

Every element has been included for a reason. Your plan may contain facial work, posture, breathing, neck work, or release techniques depending on what your assessment shows.

SECTION TWO

What Should I Feel?

What should I feel during an exercise?

You may feel the intended muscle working, gentle stretching, mild effort, or increased awareness of the area. Some exercises feel very subtle — especially when we're working on coordination, control, or stability.

You should be able to perform the exercise while breathing comfortably and staying in control. You don't need a strong sensation for an exercise to be effective.

What if I don't feel the muscle you're talking about?

That's okay. Some muscles are hard to identify or consciously activate, especially while learning a new movement. Don't compensate with more pressure, force, or repetitions — focus on technique and follow the cues.

If you consistently can't feel or understand the movement, send us a practice video so we can check your form and guide you.

What if one side feels different from the other?

This is common. Your two sides naturally differ in strength, mobility, coordination, or tension due to posture, movement habits, chewing patterns, or past experiences.

Your goal is not to force both sides to feel identical. If your plan gives different instructions or dosage per side, follow those rather than balancing things yourself.

11

What if I feel tension somewhere else?

Pause and pay attention to it. You may notice unnecessary tension in your:

- Jaw
- Neck
- Shoulders
- Forehead
- Tongue
- Upper chest

This can mean you're compensating or using more effort than needed. Try reducing the intensity and resetting your posture and breathing. If it continues or you're unsure, message us before increasing the intensity.

Is it normal for my face to feel tired?

A mild feeling of muscle fatigue or increased awareness can occur, particularly when you're learning to use muscles in a new way.

If your face feels excessively tired after practice, or the sensation doesn't settle, let us know so we can assess whether your dosage or technique needs adjusting.

What if an exercise feels uncomfortable?

First, stop and reassess rather than pushing through. Ask yourself:

- Am I using too much force?
- Am I holding my breath?
- Am I clenching my jaw?
- Am I compensating with my neck or shoulders?
- Am I moving too quickly?

Reduce the intensity and try again only if it feels comfortable and controlled. If the discomfort continues, stop the exercise and contact us.

Should I push through discomfort?

No. FaceYoguez isn't about forcing your body through discomfort to achieve a stronger result. A mild stretch, manageable effort, or temporary muscle fatigue may be appropriate.

Sharp pain, increasing discomfort, dizziness, numbness, tingling, significant headache, or worsening jaw symptoms are reasons to stop and seek guidance. More intensity doesn't automatically mean more progress.

“More sensation ≠ better results.”

We're looking for precision, control, and appropriate activation and relaxation — not maximum effort. Your goal is to teach your body how to move better, not to make an exercise feel harder.

SECTION THREE

What If Something Changes?

15

What if my jaw starts feeling tight?

Pause the exercises that appear to increase the tightness and let us know. Jaw tension can rise when you're unintentionally clenching, using too much effort, holding your breath, or compensating with surrounding muscles.

Don't add extra jaw-release exercises or try to correct it yourself unless instructed. For significant or persistent jaw pain, follow up with your dentist, physiotherapist, or another appropriate healthcare professional.

What if I develop a headache after a session?

Stop the session and allow your body to settle. Check whether you were:

- Clenching your jaw
- Holding your breath
- Overworking your neck
- Lifting or tensing your shoulders
- Using more force than instructed
- Holding your head or neck in an uncomfortable position

If the headache is mild and resolves, let us know before your next session so we can review your technique.

What if I feel more tension on one side?

Don't immediately try to “fix” the difference with extra repetitions or additional exercises on that side. Your plan may already account for asymmetry, and the difference you notice is sometimes useful feedback for us.

Tell us what you're experiencing and, if possible, send a practice video. Let the assessment guide the adjustment — not guesswork.

What if I feel unusually tired after practice?

A little tiredness or muscle fatigue can happen, particularly with a new routine — but you shouldn't feel consistently drained after your sessions.

If you're experiencing unusual or persistent fatigue, reduce or pause the session and let us know. We may need to review your overall dosage, intensity, recovery, breathing, or technique.

What if an exercise doesn't feel right for my body?

Don't force it. Stop the exercise and tell us what you noticed. When you message us, try to describe:

- Which exercise you were doing
- Where you felt the sensation
- Whether it was discomfort, pain, tension, or fatigue
- Which side was affected
- Whether the sensation continued after you stopped

If possible, send a short video. We can then determine whether it's technique, dosage, compensation, or whether the exercise needs modifying.

20

What should I do if I miss several days?

Don't try to catch up by doubling your sessions. Simply return to your prescribed schedule unless we've specifically instructed you otherwise.

If you've missed several days because you were unwell, experienced discomfort, travelled, or had another significant change, let us know before restarting if you're unsure how to proceed. Consistency is important, but forcing yourself to catch up is not the goal.

SECTION FOUR

Progress & Reviews

Your 1:1 program is an evolving process — not a fixed exercise plan. Here's how we track your progress and decide what comes next.

When should I take progress photos?

Take them according to the schedule in your personalized plan. Unless instructed otherwise, we recommend every 2–4 weeks — and before your review calls — rather than checking your appearance every day. For the most useful comparison:

- Use the same location and lighting.
- Keep your camera at about the same height and distance.
- Use the same hairstyle where possible.
- Take photos without makeup if possible.
- Take front, left-profile, and right-profile photos.
- Keep your expression and head position consistent.

The goal is to create comparable images, not perfect photographs.

Why do I need progress photos?

Because day-to-day changes are difficult to notice when you see yourself in the mirror every day. Photos let us compare more objectively and can reveal changes you'd otherwise overlook.

They also help us evaluate whether your current plan is supporting your goals and whether adjustments may be appropriate. Don't rely only on how you feel from one day to the next.

23

What changes should I track besides appearance?

Your transformation isn't only what you see in a photograph. Depending on your personalized goals, you may also notice changes in:

- Facial awareness
- Muscle control
- Jaw or facial tension
- Postural awareness
- Breathing habits
- Neck and shoulder tension
- Ease of movement
- Symmetry or coordination
- Puffiness
- How your face feels throughout the day
- Your ability to perform exercises correctly

Your progress may show up in function and awareness before it becomes obvious visually.

When will my plan be reviewed?

Your plan will be reviewed according to the 1:1 program structure you've enrolled in and the check-in schedule provided to you. During a review we look at your progress photos, feedback, exercise experience, consistency, technique, and any changes you've noticed.

The purpose isn't simply to ask "Did you complete your exercises?" — it's to understand how your body is responding to the current plan.

Can my routine change during the program?

Yes. Your personalized plan isn't necessarily fixed for the entire program. As your awareness, coordination, strength, mobility, tension patterns, or goals change, your plan may change too. We may:

- Progress an exercise
- Reduce the dosage
- Change the frequency
- Introduce a new exercise
- Remove an exercise
- Change the sequence
- Add or modify posture, breathing, or body work

Changes are part of personalization — they don't mean your previous routine was wrong.

26

Why might you reduce or change an exercise even if I feel it's working?

Because feeling an exercise strongly isn't the only measure of whether it's appropriate. Sometimes an exercise has achieved the purpose it was prescribed for, or your body may now benefit from a different stimulus.

We may also reduce an exercise if we're seeing excessive tension, compensation, or fatigue, or if another area now needs more attention. Your plan is adjusted to what your body needs now — not simply to what feels intense.

27

What if I don't see the expected change?

First, don't panic or start adding extra exercises. Progress isn't always linear, and visible changes vary with consistency, technique, recovery, lifestyle factors, and your individual starting point.

During your review we'll look at the bigger picture rather than judging from a single photograph or one week. If something isn't progressing as expected, we can reassess and adjust. A 1:1 program isn't about forcing a predetermined result — it's about continually working toward your goals using the information your body gives us.

“Your plan evolves as you do.”

We don't expect you to look, feel, or move exactly the same throughout your program. Your progress gives us information — and that information helps determine your next step.

Communication & Support

28

Where should I send my questions?

Please use the designated FaceYoguez support channel provided to you at the beginning of your program. Keeping your questions and updates in one place helps us stay organized and ensures your plan can be reviewed accurately.

Please avoid sending important plan-related questions through multiple platforms, as this makes your updates difficult to track.

29

Can I send a video if I'm unsure about my form?

Yes. If you're unsure whether you're performing an exercise correctly, a short practice video can be very helpful. For the clearest feedback:

- Keep the camera steady.
- Make sure your face and the relevant body area are visible.
- Use enough lighting to see the movement clearly.
- Perform a few normal repetitions rather than exaggerating.
- Tell us which exercise you're demonstrating and what you're unsure about.

30

What should I include when reporting discomfort?

The more specific you are, the easier it is for us to understand what may be happening. When messaging us, include:

- Which exercise you were doing
- Where you felt the sensation
- What it felt like — tension, pressure, fatigue, discomfort, or pain
- Which side was affected, if applicable
- When it started
- Whether it stopped when you stopped the exercise
- Whether it's still present afterward
- Anything else that changed around the same time

31

When should I contact you instead of continuing the exercise?

Contact us whenever you're uncertain whether a sensation or movement is appropriate. Especially reach out if:

- An exercise repeatedly feels uncomfortable.
- You can't understand or perform the movement.
- You notice significant compensation.
- One side suddenly feels very different.
- Your jaw becomes increasingly tense.
- You develop recurring headaches after practice.
- A symptom continues after you stop exercising.
- You aren't sure whether to continue, modify, or skip an exercise.

When in doubt, pause rather than pushing through and hoping it improves.

32

How do I request a plan adjustment?

Simply contact us through your designated support channel and explain what you're experiencing — you don't need to decide the adjustment yourself. For example, instead of:

"I think I should remove this exercise and add more jaw release."

tell us:

"I've noticed increased tightness around my jaw after this exercise for the last three sessions."

That gives us the information we need to assess the situation and decide. You tell us what you're experiencing; we'll determine the appropriate adjustment.

33

What happens during a review?

Your review is an opportunity to assess how your body is responding to your current plan and decide what comes next. Depending on your program, we'll review:

- Your progress photos
- Your consistency
- Your exercise experience
- Your technique
- Changes you've noticed
- Areas that feel better or more difficult
- New or changing symptoms
- Your current goals
- Any questions or concerns

Based on this, your plan may be continued, progressed, reduced, modified, or redesigned as appropriate. A review isn't simply a progress check.

You bring the practice and the feedback — we'll guide every adjustment along the way. 🌸
